As of 30 September 1952, 54.8% of all the communities in Bohemia and Moravia had established collective farms and 53.6% of the communities in Slovakia had done so. Taking into account the fact that 9% of the communities in Czechoslovakia had set up committees to prepare for the establishment of collective farms, a total of 63.6% either had collective farms on the date mentioned or were making preparations for their establishment.
